QUICK-REFERENCE GUIDE · FOR COACHES AND SPORTS BUSINESSES

Can I trust AI with this?

Chatbots like ChatGPT and Claude write by predicting likely next words from patterns. That makes them great at drafting and explaining, but nothing inside them automatically checks every answer against reality. Use this page to decide when an answer needs backup.

1. Is it live?
Today's weather, schedules, prices, standings.

2. Is it exact?
Math, fees, stats, dates, names.

3. Is it private?
Info the AI was never given, or data you shouldn't share.

4. Is it high-stakes?
Health, legal, money, eligibility, safety.

Good fit

Strong pattern-based tasks. Still give it a normal review.

Drafting parent emails and newsletters
Check every date, price, and name before sending.

Session plans and drill ideas
You're the coaching expert. Review for safety and accuracy.

Explaining well-known concepts
Rules of the game, positions, common training methods.

Brainstorming camp names and content ideas
Check that names aren't already taken or trademarked.

Summarizing documents you supply
Paste the policy, report, or article and ask for a summary.

Danger zone

Needs a source, tool, expert, or check. Not "never right," just needs backup.

Today's weather, field status, or schedules
Use a live source. The AI's training is a past snapshot.

Exact math: fees, payroll, player stats
Use a calculator or spreadsheet when the number matters.

Injuries or medical questions
Send players to a doctor or athletic trainer.

Waivers, contracts, NIL, eligibility
Rules are specific and current. Check with an expert.

Recent rule changes or news
Supply the source or use search, then verify.

Rule of thumb: if the answer is live, exact, private, or high-stakes, treat the AI's reply as a first draft and verify it with a source, a tool, or an expert.

Why AI makes things up

Ask about something it has no data on and it can still produce an answer-shaped reply. In one exercise, I named "Yaldabaoth" president of Velmora, a country that doesn't exist, just because it sounded like a name. Models can do the same thing, and sound confident while doing it.

How I build around it

My own chatbot only answers from my business info. If it doesn't know, it says so and gives my contact. It never gives medical advice and never confirms bookings itself.

Protect player privacy

Don't paste minors' contact details, medical notes, or private messages into public AI tools. Also, a general chatbot can't "remember" a private conversation it was never given. If it claims to, it's guessing.

Ralph Montero · Master's in AI, Indiana Wesleyan University
ralphmontero.github.io/AIML-500-Professional-Portfolio

Based on the "Be the Model" LLM training exercise, AIML-500.
General guidance, not legal or medical advice.